The Atlas Score isn't magic. It's five real factors:

- Momentum (price + range position)
- Analyst breadth (buy/sell split)
- News momentum (recent headlines, classified)
- Macro alignment (your sector vs. the current regime)
- Valuation (P/E percentile)

Combined, weighted, and paired with a Claude-written research note. Before 9:30am ET. Every morning.

60-second read

If you're spending an hour every morning reading analyst reports and still feeling like you're behind — I want to tell you about Atlas Analysis.

Atlas is an AI-powered stock research platform that runs a full analysis pipeline every night across eight sectors — Mining, AI, Tech, Biotech, Energy, Defense, Media — and delivers the results before market open.

What makes it different is the Atlas Score. It's not a black box. It combines five real data signals: price momentum, analyst breadth, news sentiment, macro alignment by sector, and a valuation factor. Then Claude writes a research note — specific bull factors, bear factors, and one actionable insight — all grounded in the same underlying numbers.

The macro alignment piece is the one I keep coming back to. Atlas actually adjusts how it weights sectors based on the current regime — yield curve, VIX, Fed funds rate. That's the kind of context that normally costs you a Bloomberg terminal.

Seven-day free trial, no credit card commitment, and it starts at CA$29.99 a month after that.

Go to atlasanalysis.net — that's A-T-L-A-S-A-N-A-L-Y-S-I-S dot net — and start your trial today.
